The Drought of 2010

As 2010 begins, eleven gifted young actors can't book a steady job anywhere in Hollywood. They aren't short on talent. They're boxed in by four walls they can't see, and then hit by personal disasters on top of that. Only one of them is working nonstop: Marc-Anthony Bullock, for a completely different reason (Section 3).

Section 1 — The Four Walls

Wall	What it is	Who it traps
1. The Gus Rule (Donohue)	Since 1923, Donohue has refused to hire the family or household of its sitting CEO, so no one can claim favoritism. When Natasha became CEO on Oct. 1, 2006, the rule kicked in for her circle. Existing contracts were honored until they ran out, and the last of them ended in 2009. The policy is admirable, and it shuts the family out of the biggest employer in entertainment.	Elxa, Grace, Amond (who lives with the family half the time and is counted as household), and Marc-Anthony (see Section 3)
2. The Federal Monitor (Washington)	Under a 1997 Justice Department consent decree over Donohue's market dominance, any company that does business with Donohue must get a federal monitor's approval before paying any Donohue family member. Nearly every company in the world does business with Donohue. Reviews take 6 to 14 months, and most producers give up long before then.	Elxa, Grace, Marc-Anthony
3. The Smilley Blacklist (Crownstone)	Since the defection of Mar. 1, 2007, Charles Smilley has kept an unwritten list. Anyone who left Nickelodeon with Marc-Anthony, works closely with him, or is close to the Bullocks doesn't get hired at Crownstone Pictures, Nickelodeon, MTV, BET, Comedy Central, CBS, or Showtime. Through CBS, it also reaches half of The CW. Nothing is ever written down, and every casting director in town knows about it.	Tayia, Amond, Tyler, the Bullock sisters, and anyone who shows up at Marc-Anthony's parties
4. The Crossfire (everyone else)	Warner Bros., Universal, Sony, Fox, and Lionsgate want no part of a war between the Mouse and the Crown, and neither do the independents. Their unofficial policy: "Don't hire anyone either side might be mad about."	Everyone listed above

And the real world piled on

- The 2007–08 writers' strike (Nov. 5, 2007 – Feb. 12, 2008) wiped out a pilot season and left studios with fewer scripted shows.
- The SAG contract standoff (the actors' contract expired June 30, 2008, and a new one wasn't ratified until June 9, 2009) made studios afraid to start new films.
- The 2008 financial crisis dried up independent film money, and studio slates were cut by a third.
- DVD sales collapsed, ending the mid-budget movies young actors usually graduate into.
- Reality TV took over prime-time slots that used to go to scripted dramas.

Section 2 — Eleven Droughts

AMOND BAKER

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	17 (turns 18 on Feb. 10, 2010)
Walls	The Gus Rule (counted as household), the Smilley Blacklist, the Crossfire
The personal disaster	In August 2009 his agency, Pinnacle Talent, collapsed when its founder was arrested for running a $340 million Ponzi scheme on its clients. Amond's contracts, back pay, and future representation rights are frozen in federal bankruptcy court, and he can't sign with a new agent until a judge releases him, with a hearing set for Nov. 2010. On top of that, he grew seven inches in 2009: too tall for kids' roles and still too young-looking for adult ones.
2010 reality	Zero bookings, and waiting tables at a Culver City diner, where his manager says the tips are better than the residuals.
What ends it	Green Arrow, 2012

TYRESE AVERY

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	18 (turns 19 on July 24, 2010)
Walls	The Crossfire, plus his own fame
The personal disaster	In 2009 he signed a $400 million world-tour contract: 280 shows in 41 countries from 2009 to 2012, which leaves no time to shoot a film. Then in October 2009 he fell 14 feet through a stage trapdoor in São Paulo. He recovered fully, but film insurers now refuse to cover any production with him, and without insurance no studio can start shooting. Add the bad reviews for Midnight Shift, and Hollywood's verdict is that he's uninsurable and can't act.
2010 reality	Sells out stadiums every night and can't get an acting audition.
What ends it	The tour ends early in 2015; he's cast as Hawkman that year

ESTHER SMILLEY

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	17 (turns 18 on Sept. 20, 2010)
Walls	Her own family
The personal disaster	As a minor, Esther can't sign anything without her parents' approval, and her parents are also her managers. Since “coming home” to Crownstone in 2009, Vivian has turned down 147 scripts, a record her agents keep in a binder. Charles has shelved the two Crownstone films she was cast in, worried they would “age her too fast.” When she turns 18 on Sept. 20, 2010, she can sign for herself, but the Crossfire means no other studio will take Charles Smilley's daughter away from him.
2010 reality	America's sweetheart, with an empty calendar and the most famous unused talent in town.
What ends it	Wonder Woman on CBS in 2015, the one role her father couldn't say no to

ARIANNA CUMMINGS

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	17 (turns 18 on Oct. 25, 2010)
Walls	The Crossfire, and disappearing paperwork
The personal disaster	Bronzeville, the Sundance film that should have made her a star, was bought in January 2009 by Crownstone Vantage, the studio's specialty-film label. Crownstone then shut the label down, as Paramount did with its Vantage label in real life. The film's rights are stuck in the shutdown, and it can't be released, sold, or even screened for casting directors. Her career-defining performance is locked away. Then her agent retired, and his assistant lost her file.
2010 reality	Critics call her the best young actress nobody's seen. She's working at a Chicago box office.
What ends it	Hawkgirl, 2015

HARMONY DIVINE

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	17 (turns 18 on June 19, 2010)
Walls	The Crossfire, and a contract trap
The personal disaster	At 16 she signed a seven-year option deal with Crownstone's MTV Films for a planned dance-movie franchise called Step Into It. The studio can keep her under contract simply by renewing the option every year, which it has, without ever making the movie. The deal bans her from appearing in any other feature film. Crownstone has no intention of making the film, and it isn't letting her go either.
2010 reality	Legally barred from movies, she's auditioning for TV guest spots, where casting directors only see her as a dancer.
What ends it	Iris West, 2014, once the option expires and her lawyers win

TYLER CHAPMAN

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	17 (turns 18 on Jan. 4, 2010)
Walls	The Smilley Blacklist, and a legal trap
The personal disaster	His Garage Band contract included a Nick Records deal that trademarked "Tyler Chapman" as a Viacom brand name through 2012. He legally can't perform, act, or release music under his own name anywhere else. Then on Jan. 5, 2010, the day after his own 18th birthday, he's photographed at Marc-Anthony's 18th birthday party, and he goes on the Blacklist.
2010 reality	An actor who can't legally use his own name.
What ends it	The trademark expires in 2012; he's cast as the Reverse-Flash in 2014

DAVID TIPTON

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	19 (turns 20 on Nov. 14, 2010)
Walls	The Crossfire, and a case of mistaken identity
The personal disaster	A casting database mistakenly merged his records with those of a different David Tipton from Houston who has a felony record. Every background check and insurance screening flags him. He has spent 14 months and $9,000 he doesn't have trying to clear his name. At 6'4", he's also “too tall for the leading ladies,” and his old knee injury scares insurers.
2010 reality	Working the front desk at a Burbank gym, cast in nothing.
What ends it	The record is cleared in 2011; he's cast as Black Adam in 2016

TAYIA BOYD

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	17 (turns 18 on Feb. 3, 2010)
Walls	The Smilley Blacklist (high on it), the Crossfire
The personal disaster	She left Nickelodeon with Marc-Anthony in 2007, so to Charles she's the second defector. Then the first Broadway musical she starred in lost its funding in September 2008, the week Lehman Brothers collapsed, when its lead investor went bankrupt. It closed in previews and left her with a reputation as “the girl from the show that never opened.”
2010 reality	Typecast as the funny best friend, blacklisted at a third of the industry, and left with a closed Broadway show on her résumé.
What ends it	Black Canary, 2012

ELXA BULLOCK

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	19 (turns 20 on Aug. 29, 2010)
Walls	The Gus Rule, the Federal Monitor, the Smilley Blacklist, the Crossfire
The personal disaster	Her ABC Family talk show was protected by an existing contract until it ended in December 2009. Since then, every offer she has received is in federal review: the monitor reviewed one indie drama for 11 months, and its financing fell through. Producers outside the system won't hire “the Donohue princess,” afraid it will look like they're trying to buy Donohue's favor.
2010 reality	The most famous unemployed host in America.
What ends it	Batwoman, 2019

GRACE BULLOCK

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	15 (turns 16 on Apr. 12, 2010)
Walls	The Gus Rule, the Federal Monitor, the Smilley Blacklist, the Crossfire
The personal disaster	Gracie Goes Global ended when her existing contract ran out in December 2009. California's child labor laws limit the hours a minor can work on set, and with the federal reviews on top, every production would need two separate approvals plus a studio teacher, and producers quit before they start. Her record label is a Donohue company, so her next album is blocked by the Gus Rule too.
2010 reality	An award winner at 15 who can't book a guest spot.
What ends it	Donna Troy, 2017

ELIJAH BLACKMAN

Age (Jan. 1, 2010)	15 (turns 16 on Mar. 23, 2010)
Walls	The Crossfire, and a family war
The personal disaster	His parents' bitter 2009 divorce left the court requiring both parents' signatures on every contract, and his trust account under California's Coogan Law is frozen until they agree. They haven't agreed on anything since 2008. Six offers, including Space Cadets 3, expired unsigned. And at 15 he still looks 12, so casting directors don't know what age to cast him as.
2010 reality	A talented kid whose career is stuck in family court.
What ends it	He turns 18 in 2012 and signs for himself; he's cast as Billy Batson in 2017

Section 3 — The Exception: Marc-Anthony Bullock

Marc-Anthony has no dry spell. All four walls apply to him too, and they don't stop him. His issue is the opposite of a drought: he gets too many offers, and they're the wrong kind.

- He got around the Federal Monitor. At 15, Marc-Anthony read the whole 412-page 1997 consent decree in one weekend and found a lawful way through it. He structures every deal through his own company, Hyperion Kid Productions, using a pre-approved arm's-length framework he drafted himself. The monitor approved it in 2008, and other monitored companies now copy it. Everyone else waits 6 to 14 months; Marc-Anthony gets cleared in 9 days.
- The Gus Rule doesn't reach his biggest contracts. His Hollywood Records deal and his Long Way Home contract were signed in 2005, before Natasha became CEO, and they're honored through 2011. Everything new he does goes to other studios or he finances himself.
- He's too big to blacklist. Charles Smilley can keep Marc-Anthony out of Crownstone, but he can't keep him out of Warner, Universal, Sony, or Fox. Marc-Anthony brings in a huge built-in audience, so the studios that avoid everyone else in the Crossfire make an exception for him.
- He works for himself. He produces his own stand-up tours, music, and comedy specials and sells them worldwide. Nobody can cancel a man who owns his own work.
- His 2010 calendar: a lead role in a Universal comedy (shooting in spring 2010); the self-produced world stand-up tour Marc-Anthony: Unsupervised (42 cities); his second album, Grown; and a Golden Globe nomination for The Long Way Home. Of 412 offers in 2009, 389 were comedies.

Why this hurts him

Marc-Anthony is the only one of his friends who is working, and he knows some of the walls are there because of him. He bends every rule he can to share his luck. He writes a clause into every new contract requiring the studio to audition at least two of his friends (the “Marc-Anthony Rider”). Studios sign it, hold the auditions, and never cast them. He secretly pays Amond's legal bills, and Amond finds out and is furious. He quietly gives Arianna's name to every director he works with. And he promises Tayia, Amond, and Grace the same thing on New Year's Eve 2009: “I'm gonna build a door in every one of these walls. Y'all are walking through it with me.”

He keeps that promise. In 2012, 2014, and 2015, the doors open one by one, in the DCTVU, at Warner Bros., the one studio big enough to stand up to the Mouse and the Crown.
